

www.traveltorecovery.com

My blog is in its early stages, I'm learning new things everyday but I have the dedication and ambition to make it succeed.

Things can happen that make you realise how precious life is and you have to do what you dream of rather than putting it off. In 2014 I started my lifelong ambition of travelling the world. The year soon turned into a nightmare as one month into my travels it was cut short as I was diagnosed with breast cancer. The thought of finally getting back to travelling helped me through the dark days.

Now treatment is over I'm back living the dream, though I have to do things slightly different now due to side effects from treatment. I'm not as strong but I'm determined to not let this stop me. My disability may be invisible to others but it is there every day for me, in a way it is giving me the push I need to live for the day as you never know, it may be your last.

I offer tips, information and advice based on my own travels which are mainly luxury at affordable prices. I also highlight accessibility due to my own mobility issues, which makes me stand out from many other travel bloggers. I am based in the UK with 60% of my readers also being from the UK and 35% from USA 5% from the rest of the world.

I am currently studying Travel Writing with the London School of Journalism and a diploma in Advertising and Marketing. I have experience of event planning, promotion and research

I am a keen photographer and I also have the opportunity of professional photographers to join me on trips.

6500 visitors per month
23000 page views per month

Brands I have worked with :

Followers

980+

www.facebook.com/traveltorecoveryblog

15900+

www.twitter.com/travel2recovery

3820+

www.instagram.com/traveltorecovery

5950+

www.pinterest.com/traveltorecovery

Average 250k
monthly impressions

AVAILABLE FOR
Sponsored Posts
Social Media coverage
Product Reviews
Advertising
Press and FAM trips
Event promotion
Hotel restaurant reviews
Brand ambassador

Contact details :

Based in UK

Jenni Sheldon

traveltorecovery@hotmail.com